Tufi — Papua New Guinea

TUFI DIVE RESORT

Special Group Departure

Tufi is a small town located in a remote, pristine region of Papua New Guinea at the tip of Cape Nelson in Oro Province. Tufi has been described as the “Scandinavia of the Tropics.” The breathtaking “fjords”, locally known as rhias, were not carved out by icy glaciers but created by the ancient eruption of three volcanoes. They plunge to over 90 metres and rise more than 150 metres vertically above the water. The scenery is simply spectacular! There are numerous coastal villages open to visitors, providing peaceful backdrops to relax and experience the local culture between dives.

Tufi offers incredible marine diversity and an exceptional variety of diving experiences, including rhias, offshore reefs, walls, bommies, muck diving and wrecks. The sheltered waters of the rhias provide fascinating diving, while the shallow areas near the wharf are renowned for their abundance of unusual macro life and fantastic photographic opportunities.

A 20–50 minute boat ride brings divers to a string of spectacular offshore reefs, where dramatic bommies rise from very deep surrounding waters to within approximately seven metres of the surface. Visibility frequently exceeds 30 metres, creating superb conditions for exploring colourful coral gardens, steep walls, drop-offs and reef formations. There is an abundance of marine life, including huge schools of reef fish, barracuda, Spanish mackerel, tuna, whitetip and blacktip reef sharks, while hammerheads may occasionally be encountered. Manta rays, eagle rays and turtles are also regularly seen cruising around the reefs.

The combination of healthy coral reefs, dramatic underwater topography, excellent visibility, rich marine biodiversity and exciting encounters with both macro life and pelagics makes Tufi an outstanding destination for underwater photographers and adventurous divers alike. Above and below the water, Tufi offers something increasingly difficult to find – spectacular diving in a truly remote, largely untouched tropical environment.
